

The South Seas Being an Account of Experiences and Stevenson Friends in the Marquesas, Vol. 22 (Classic Reprint)

The following chapters, printed in book form for the first time in 1896, are selected from a series which was first published partially in Black and White (February to December, 1891), and fully in the New York Sun during the same period. The voyages which supplied the occasion and the material for the work were three in number, viz.: one of seven months (June, 1888, to January, 1889), in the yacht Casco, from San Francisco to the Marquesas, the Paumotu, Tahiti, and thence northwards to Hawaii; a second (June to December, 1889), trading schooner Equator, from Honolulu, the Hawaiian capital (where the author had stayed in the interval), to the Gilberts and thence to Samoa; and a third (April to September, 1890), in the trading steamer, Janet Nicoll, which set out from Sydney and followed a very devious course, extending as far as Penrhyn in the Eastern to the Marshall Islands in the Western Pacific. The course of these several voyages can easily be traced on the accompanying map, where each is marked by a different kind of red line. Before setting out on his Pacific travels, the author had contracted to write an account of them in the form of letters for serial publication. The plan by and by changed in his mind into that of a book partly of travel and partly of research, which should combine the results of much careful observation and inquiry upon matters of island history, custom, belief, and tradition, with some account of his own experiences and those of his traveling companions. Under the nominal title of letters he began to compose the chapters of such a book on board the Janet Nicoll, and continued the task during the first ten months of his residence in Samoa (October, 1890, to July, 1891). These chapters were sent home in fulfilment of his promise; but before the serial publication had gone very far, he realized that the personal and the i(Typographical errors
