They did not want men like Mr John Erskine in their ranks, even if the keenly argumentative Covenanting flocks did want them. Thus, in 1755, there was a vacancy at Jedburgh. The elders issued a manifesto that they would stand and fall together in the election of a minister with the majority of the parish. The candidature of Mr Boston, junior, minister of Oxnam, was organised, and Mr Boston was a chip of the old anti-Abjuration Boston, minister of Ettrick, who had died before the Secession. The living was a Crown living, and the Crown presented a Mr Douglas. The parish resisted, the Presbytery refused to induct Mr Douglas, and Mr Boston, remarking that several things in the National Church have all along been disagreeable to me, left it and threw Vol. iv. x 322 DOCTRINAL TROUBLES. in his lot with what he called the oppressed heritage of God, while those of his way of thinking were a small and inconsiderable handful. He therefore adhered to the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, but shook off his feet the dust of the National Church. He occupied a chapel at Jedburgh, and with two friends in 1761 formed himself and them into quite a fresh Presbytery,--not Burgher, not Antiburgher, not that of the Rev. John Erskine, nor that of the Rev. Ralph and Ebenezer Erskine, but the Presbytery of the Relief. Meanwhile gross and dangerous errors on doctrinal points broke out in pulpits of the elder Secession, and one sinner, Mr Carmichael, came under the lesser excommunication, and was threatened with the higher excommunication. A ...
