Not illustrated. 1840 Excerpt: ...schismatic clergy, who should subscribe and swear their abjuration and obedience; to establish in all the churches the use of the perfect creed; to prepare the entrance of a cardinal legate, with the full powers and dignity of his office; and to instruct the emperor in the advantages which he might derive from the temporal protection of the Roman pontiff (33). But they found a country without a friend, a nation in which the His names of Rome and Union were pronounced with abhorrence. The roman patriarch Joseph was indeed removed: his place was filled by Vec-cus, an ecclesiastic of learning and moderation; and the emperor muk was still urged by the same motives, to persevere in the same professions. But in his private language, Patoologus affected to deplore the pride, and to blame the innovations, of the Latins; and while he debased his character by this double hypocrisy, he justified and punished the opposition of his subjects. By the joint suffrage of the dew and the ancient Rome, a sentence of excommunication was pronounced against the obstinate schismatics: the censures of the (32) See the acts of the council of Lyons in the year 127).
