IN dealing with this subject the word capital will be used in its scientific sense, as the synonym for a product Of labor which has been saved for future productive use. The stone axes and other stone implements which have been found under the glacial drift may be taken as the oldest examples of capital that are still in existence. There are people now in the world who make use of Similar instruments in their customary life, and who could use their prehistoric types if they were placed in their charge. The fine Cloth made of ?ax, in which the Egyptian mummies are incased, may be taken as an example Of the Oldest textile fabric, rivaling in its fine, even quality Of texture the best prod nets Of the modern loom.
